When the doors swung open at the Fifth avenue building the janitor ran up the flag and a lot of handshaking followed. The lobby was full of flowers. Every official and employee in sight wore a boutonmere. There was nothing suggestive of a line. A number of fashionably dressed women gave the scene somewhat the aspect of a social function.

In half an hour a director was additional wealthy.

The receiver was named following a petition in bankruptcy filed against Pati by Attorney Sidney Rosenbaum, of the firm of Hoadley, Lauterbach & Johnson, on behalf of these creditors: Antonio Viniello, $5,000 balance on the purchase price of real estate at No. 90 Elizabeth street: Maria Liveri, $500 cash depositions. eived | The petition alleges that Pati is in-

"We will ask the criminal authorities to investigate. I am informed that Pati is out of the State and bound for some foreign port. We will ask Mr. Jerome, and perhaps the Attorney-General, to help settle the muddle. Pati's bank had 7,000 depositors."

That Pati, who is sometimes called the "Italian J. P. Morgan," of this city, has fled the country and is now on his way to Montevideo, was the report which to-day reached the Italian Detective Bureau at Police Headquarters. Pati formerly lived in Montevideo, and is well acquainted in Uruguay. Brazil and Argentina.

On top of this came the news from the District-Attorney's office that a new investigation was being made into the killing of Francisco Palletere by Pati at the latter's bank two weeks ago. At the latter's bank two weeks ago. At the latter's bank two weeks ago. The policeman held on until another policeman came to his assistance, and the runaway was stopped.

Detective Russo, of Jerome's squad, asserts that proof is offered to show that Palletere was a depositor in Pati's bank, and that he had been refused about $500 which he had on deposit. The report to the District-Attorney states that Palletere did threaten to kill the banker if he did not at once pay him the money, and that upon being refused the depositor drew $10 and bought a revolver. He was "gunning" for the banker, but Pati was too quick for him.

To-day the police had a nard time keeping in order the crowd of 500 depositors and sympathizers who swarmed in front of the Pati banking house. The litalian newspapers had assured depositors that Pati would return, they said, and they were waiting for the doors to open, when it was announced that a receiver had been named.

Coroner Peter Acritelli, who is in charge of his deceased father's bank, directly opposite from the Patis, asserts that the small private banking institutions will soon come under State control.
